US and India defence deal: Both countries will become great again

India has always been a lucrative and potential market for defence deals, whether it's with the US, France, or Russia. But when Donald Trump, the ultimate "go-getter" salesman, came into the picture, he made an offer India couldn't refuse. And let's be honest, when Trump offers you a deal, it's probably going to be big. The United States will now provide India with its most advanced and, let's just say, dangerous fighter jet—the F-35.

Prime Minister Narendra Modi's visit to the United States has paved the way for India to get its hands on this cutting-edge fighter jet. At a joint press conference, US President Donald Trump announced that America would increase defense cooperation with India, including the provision of the F-35 Lightning II. For those who don't follow military tech, this is a fifth-generation stealth fighter. Sounds intimidating, right?

The meeting between Modi and Trump went off without a hitch, with a few deals signed. One of the major agreements was for India to import more oil and gas from the US in an effort to reduce the trade deficit between the two countries. In return, this will decrease India's reliance on Russia. In case anyone missed it, the US is keen on becoming India's number one supplier of oil and gas. So, goodbye, Russia, hello America.

Following the bilateral talks at the White House, Modi and Trump held a joint press conference where they shared details about the new agreements and took questions from journalists. Modi proudly stated that by 2030, India-US trade would double, while Trump, ever the humble negotiator, admitted that PM Modi was actually the better dealmaker. We're sure that went down well in the Modi camp.

During the press conference, Modi expressed his gratitude for Trump's warm hospitality, acknowledging the strides made in revitalizing India-US relations under Trump's leadership. The two leaders also discussed their commitment to fighting terrorism, with Modi emphasizing the need for strict action against cross-border terrorism. Modi was quick to thank Trump for the extradition of 26/11 terrorist Tahawwur Rana, who will now face justice in India. Apparently, the US is stepping up in the fight against terror—though we do wonder what they'll do next with the growing list of high-profile terrorists looking for asylum.

Modi also referenced Trump's famous slogan, "Make America Great Again" (MAGA), and proposed a little twist: When America and India work together, it becomes "MIGA"—a "Mega Partnership for Prosperity." Sure, it sounds a little too polished, but hey, it's not a bad slogan for a "superpower" duo.

On a more serious note, Modi and Trump also agreed on a framework for cooperation under TRUST (Transforming Relations Through the Use of Strategic Technology), which will focus on building a solid supply chain for critical minerals, advanced materials, and pharmaceuticals. Because what's a defense deal without a little cross-border tech collaboration?

Trump also gave a glimmer of hope for tackling the terrorist menace and maybe ending the days of harboring criminals. He authorized the extradition of one of the masterminds behind the 2008 Mumbai terrorist attacks—Tahawwur Rana. He's coming back to India, where justice surely awaits. But don't get too excited, India, because the next step might involve a little back-and-forth with the US over the deportation of Gurpatwant Singh Pannun. He's the designated terrorist pushing anti-India propaganda and stirring trouble in Manipur and Tamil Nadu. Who knows, maybe the next extradition request will be in the pipeline.

With all this momentum, it seems both India and the US are on track to become the best of friends, with each having their own interests to protect—and plenty of opportunities to make "greatness" a reality once again.
